OBSTACLES BESET PLANS FOR PEACE CONFERENCE HERE

Southern Opposition To Wang Yi-tang Reason For Delay

FAILS TO ARRIVE

Chief Northern Delegate Remaining In Nanking For Present

PLAN IS OUTLINED

Believed Open Proposal And Concessions Will Be Offered Canton

Mr. Wang Yi-tang, the new Northern delegate, did not come to Shanghai as scheduled yesterday. It is understood that Mr. Wang fully expected to carry out his itinerary, but he was prevented from doing so by General Li Shun of Nanking who is not optimistic about the situation. Tuchun Li strongly urged Mr. Wang to remain in Nanking for a few days pending his negotiations with Generals Tsen Chun-husan and Lu Yung-ting of the Southwest.

In Shanghai it is believed that there is no prospect for the recpening of the peace conference under the present circumstances. The attitude of the leading organisations, like that of the Administrative Council of Canton, has been one of strenuous opposition ever since Mr. Wang was appointed. These bodies object to the fact that Mr. Wang has been and will remain the head of the Anfu Club and the Anfu Parliament.

Wang Yi-tang Denounced

The Southern Government, represented by the Administrative Council of Canton, has openly denounced Mr. Wang and called him unfit for the post of peace delegate. Mr. Tang Shao-yi, the Southern chief delegate, is of course under instructions not to hold any parleys with Mr. Wang officially.

On the other hand, Mr. Wang is prepared for another deadlock. News from the Northern camp indicates that if the South goes so far as to refuse to negotiate with him, he will issue an open message to the Southern peace delegates setting forth the concessions that the Northern Government is willing to make and invite the South either to accept or reject it.

General Li Shun Active

General Li Shun, in his capacity of mediator, however, is doing all he can to prevent another deadlock and to save the honor of the Northern delegate from being rejected. The wires between Nanking and Canton and Wuming where Lu Yung-ting is, are being kept hot with messages, offering concessions and urging the Southern leaders to come to terms. As the situation stands today, General Li is doing all the work for peace and as soon as certain understandings are arrived at, Mr. Wang may be asked to attach his signature to the treaty formally. Meantime, an immediate resumption of the conference at the German Club is impossible.

General Wang Chi-hsiang, advisor to President Hsu Shih-chang, arrived in Shanghai Tuesday and is the guest of Mr. S. A. Hardoon. General Wang is here as the President's representative at the internal peace conference.

General Ma Hung-li left Shanghai for Nanking Tuesday to meet Mr. Wang Yi-tang, the Northern peace delegate.

Yang Tcheng Reports Wang Yi-tang Will Come

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Shanghai, September 17.—Reuter's Agency has had an interview with Mr. Yang Tcheng, the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, who has just returned from Peking, where he was in close contact with the President and the Cabinet.

The Commissioner had some suggestive remarks to make on the subject of the prospects of peace.

He stated that when he was in Peking both the President and the Acting Premier categorically informed him that Mr. Wang would go to Shanghai with full powers for the negotiations with the South.

Mr. Wang was prepared to make every reasonable concession and the Commissioner hinted that the

The Ecuador has 1,300 tons of cargo for Shanghai and will load 1,000 tons here for Manila. The Manila cargo includes 36,000 bags of Shanghai flour.

Big Rice Shipments Cause Drop In Price

The rice situation in Shanghai was temporarily and slightly relieved yesterday when the price for the best quality dropped from $9.40 to $9.05 per picul. Arrival of large quantities from the interior was the cause.

Rice merchants say, however, that the price will probably not decrease as rapidly as previously anticipated because of the activities of profiteers and Northern Generals who are attempting to secure rice for their troops. Another slight decrease in price may be expected today but it will be a long time before the figure is restored to the normal $7 mark.

STATEMENT IS ISSUED BY ITALIAN PREMIER DEPLORING FIUME RAID

Signor Nitti Denies Reports Attack Was Encouraged By Government

ALLIED FLAGS TORN DOWN

Inquiry To Be Opened At Rome To Fix Responsibility; Paris Council Meets

(Reuter's Service)

London, September 15.—The latest news from Fiume shows that a number of the inhabitants joined the raiders, also some Italian sailors who swam ashore. The raiders, it is stated, pulled down the British and French flags. The British and French troops were confined to barracks. Precise details of what occurred are still lacking.

Supreme Council Meets

Paris, September 14.—The Supreme Council met today consisting of Mr. Polk, Mr. Lloyd George, Signor Tittoni and Marshal Foch. It is presumed that the Fiume raid was discussed.

Premier Issues Statement

Rome, September 14.—Continuing his statement in the Chamber on the subject of the Fiume raid, Signor Nitti, the Premier, announced that the latest news was that the situation created in Fiume by the coup de main was serious, because 2,300 men had entered the town without any right to do so. He was determined to act so as to avoid grave conflicts.

He deplored what had happened for it was the first time that sedition even for idealistic aims had entered the Italian army. He strongly denounced "this adventurous enterprise" and repudiated the reports that the Government had encouraged it.

Government To Act

The Government, he declared, had taken every measure to prevent the raid and would not tolerate it. He deplored military sympathy with the raid and stated that steps were being taken to reorganise the army command with a view to eradicating weakness.

The Premier in speaking pointed out the danger arising through Italy failing to carry out her engagements with the Allies. He dwelt on the humiliation of the sincere apologies which he would be compelled to offer and particularly referred to the fact that such acts betrayed the interests of their country by imperiling the indispensable credits from the Allies.

Inquiry Is Ordered

Signor Nitti went on to announce that an inquiry would be opened in Rome as soon as possible to investigate the question of civil and military responsibility involved. Soldiers who failed to report within five days after they had been summoned to attend the inquiry would be prosecuted under the military penal code.

D'Annunzio's grenadiers, the Premier continued, had started at night time and proceeded in 40 motor cars to Fiume. The commander of the Eighth army corps sent the commanders of the detachments to which the raiders belonged with the object of persuading these "misguided men" to return. D'Annunzio thereupon announced his intention to instal himself at the office of the army command at Fiume.

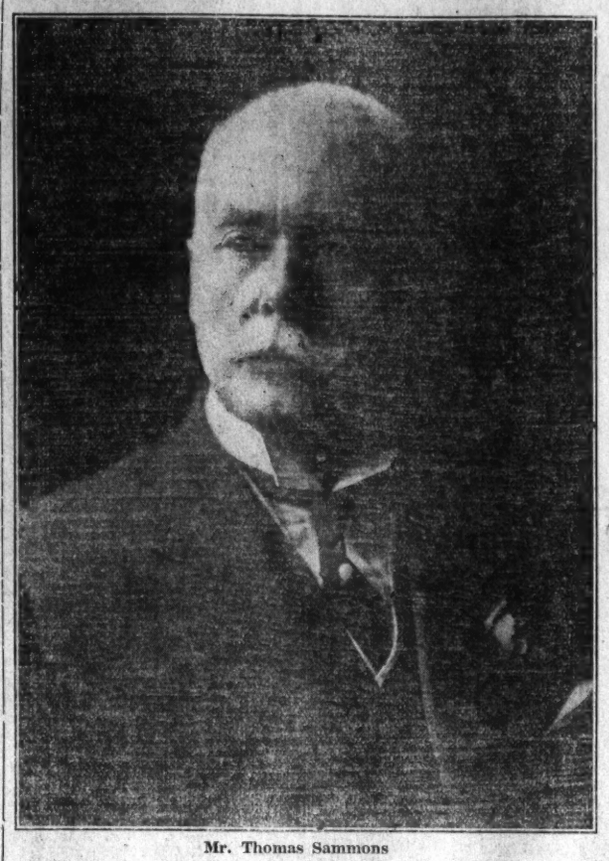
Consul-General Sammons Advanced To Melbourne Post



Mr. Thomas Sammons

Will Leave Shanghai In November After Several Years' Service As Consul-General Here

Mr. Thomas Sammons, United States Consul-General at Shanghai for the past six years, has been promoted to the post of consul-general at Melbourne and will leave for Australia about the first of November.

Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, now Consul-General at Hankow, will relieve Mr. Sammons here.

The appointment of Mr. Sammons as Consul-General to the Australian capital follows the announcement that the present American Consulate-General at Sydney is to be transferred to Melbourne. In the new position Mr. Sammons will be the head representative of the United States in diplomatic and other matters in Australia. The transfer to the important position comes after 16 years in the American Consular Service in the Far East.

Mr. Sammons was appointed Consul-General to Manchuria while Russia and Japan were at war and upon the conclusion of peace was delegated by the Department of State to carry on the negotiations for the opening of the ports of Mukden and Antung.

Goes To Korea

Subsequently he was appointed Consul-General to Korea during the period when the Japanese were taking over administrative charge of that country. Mining and missionary problems in which Americans were concerned had accumulated there for many years. Mr. Sammons set about to untangle these and by the time of his departure from that country, after three years, all of them had been adjusted or settled. American missionary differences with the authorities required careful attention and due in a large measure to Mr. Sammons' tact and patience, none during his term were forced to face serious charges.

Mr. Sammons' next appointment was to Yokohama, where he remained for four years. While Consul-General at Yokohama, he made arrangements whereby he was able to donate the building occupied by the American Consulate-General there to the American Government, this being in line with his activities for the suitable housing of American officials abroad.

Comes To Shanghai

Then he proceeded to Shanghai where he has served six years. The Consul-General while here has been active in many movements. He was concerned in promoting the American "get together" movement in Shanghai, some of the luncheons of which were attended by over more than 250. He is also credited with inaugurating the movement for an American Chamber of Commerce for China. When that body was organised he was selected as its honorary president.

Consul-General Sammons co-operated with various American organisations and individuals towards securing permanent quarters for the American Government offices in Shanghai, and he presented the matter to different commercial organisations in the United States while there on leave of absence. Eventually an appropriation of Gold $350,000 was secured, the bulk of which was expended for the purchase of the present quarters and the remainder of which is being used to complete alterations now under way. He has been at work, also, to secure appropriation for a modern American office and residential structure to replace the present buildings which house Government offices and American officials.

Gets Tallest Flagpole

In connection with the improvement of the American Government premises at Shanghai, the Consul-General has been ambitious to secure the largest single-mast flagpole in the Far East, if not in the world. No appropriation being available for this purpose, investigations were made through lumbermen, with the ultimate result that Mr. Carl L. Seitz, of the China Import and Export Lumber Co., introduced the Consul-General to Mr. C. E. Dant, the Company's Oregon agent, who, in due course, secured, as a present for Uncle Sam, the tallest mast to be found among the Oregon Pine Forests of the Pacific North-West. The pole has now arrived and will in due course be duly installed, with suitable ceremonies. It is over 160 feet long.

Legation Gets Notification Of Cunningham's Appointment

(CHINA PRESS OWN SERVICE)

Peking, September 17.—News of the appointment of Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, United States Consul-General at Hankow, as successor to Mr. Thomas Sammons at Shanghai and other changes which affect practically all consuls in the China service, was received today from the Department of State by the American Legation here.

Mr. P. S. Heintzleman, Consul-General at Tientsin, is transferred to Hankow to relieve Mr. Cunningham and the Tientsin post will be filled by Mr. Stuart J. Fuller, now Consul-General at large.

Rumanians Leave Country Without Military Or Police Protection

BRATIANO RESIGNS

Premier At Bucharest Out Due To Stand Taken On Banat Question

DEBATE IN AMERICA

Democrats Defend Treaty Opening Discussion In U.S. Senate

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, September 15.—The situation in Hungary is causing uneasiness in Peace Conference circles in consequence of Rumania's reported intention to leave the country hurriedly. The Rumanians dissolved all the military and police forces in Hungary which will therefore be exposed to the risk of grave disorders.

The Conference has requested Rumania to leave a force sufficient to maintain order pending reorganisation of the Hungarian forces.

Members of the Conference positively state that Rumania will be held responsible if she declines to comply with the Conference's request, and disorders occur in Budapest and elsewhere, as the extremists are only waiting for an opportunity to throw the country back into a state of chaos.

Rumanian Premier Out

Paris, September 14.—The Rumanian minister here learns from Bucharest that M. Bratiano, the Rumanian Premier, resigned yesterday. M. Bratiano explained that his action was due to the belief that Rumania's interests were endangered through the Allies request to Rumania to relinquish undivided possession of the Banat and share it with the Magyars and Serbs. It is stated that M. Bratiano's successor will be better enabled to submit a conciliatory formula to the Allies safeguarding Rumania's interests as he will not be pledged like M. Bratiano regarding the future of the Banat.

Treaty Up In U. S. Senate

Washington, September 16.—The Senate began the discussion of the German peace treaty on Monday. The debate opened with speeches by the Democrats recommending ratification of the Treaty without reservation or amendment.

Paris, September 15.—The peace terms will probably be handed to the Bulgarian delegates on Wednesday.

Servian Cabinet Out

Belgrade, September 13.—The Servian cabinet resigned because it had failed to obtain suppression or modification of the clauses in the Austrian peace treaty dealing with the protection of minorities in the territories ceded to Servia which Servia declares infringe Servian sovereignty. The government will remain in power during the crisis.

Syria Is Discussed

Paris, September 15.—It is learned that Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau had a satisfactory conference regarding Syria and that the temporary arrangement which was agreed upon for the regulation of the situation has been approved by the Supreme Council and will operate until the United States Government is ready to deal with the whole question of the future status of Turkey.

Alexandria, September 14.—The Emir Feisul arrived here from Damascus and left on a British destroyer to attend a conference with Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau in Paris regarding Syria.

Cape Town, September 14.—The Senate by 30 votes to five passed a motion ratifying the peace treaty similar to that passed by the House of Assembly.

Bolshevists Take Toboisk And Menace Omsk, Reportea

London Confirms Reds Are Marching On Capital But Points Out They Are Endangering Selves

(Reuter's Service)

Stockholm, September 14.—According to newspaper reports the Bolshevists have captured Toboisk and are marching on Omsk.

London, September 15.—It is authoritatively stated with regard to the report that the Bolshevists are marching on Omsk that it is true that the Bolshevists in this sector are advancing but further south Admiral Kolchak has broken the Bolshevik front in three places so that if the Bolshevists persist in their advance they run a grave risk of being cut off.

Siberian People Confident Over Present Offensive

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Harbin, September 16.—The local Siberian press points out that the present offensive on the Siberian front is everywhere regarded with the utmost confidence and has created a general enthusiasm which is incomparably stronger than during the days of the first offensive. The press says that this is largely owing to the fact that "the people have learned to rely upon the government which has managed not to lose control of public opinion and to remain popular in spite of the difficult period of the last retreat."

The following official communique has been issued at Omsk:

The offensive is developing successfully especially in the region of Yalaturovsk and the Ishim-Kurgan road and south of the railway where we have carried many villages and captured prisoners, guns, machine-guns and various booty.

The Siberian Cossacks are at present clearing the woody regions of the Bolsheviks who had fled from the front to the woods.

Plot Of Bolshevists Uncovered At Archangel

(Reuter's Service)

Stockholm, September 14.—It is reported from Helsingfors that the authorities at Archangel have discovered a Bolshevik plot aiming at the surrender of the town by armed revolt. Seven leaders of the plot have been sentenced to death and five to penal servitude.

Paris, September 15.—The Supreme Council considered the Russian question and it was agreed that the British policy of evacuation was justified as against Russian adventures by the Allies, because the Council profoundly believes that the Russian people must settle their own future provided that they respect their neighbors' rights.

Official Statements

London, September 15.—The War Office issues the following communique: "On September 13 the enemy consisting of two battalions attacked our positions on the Dvina but were heavily repulsed. We occupied Oneca unopposed on September 9 The Russians are continuing their offensive on the railway front successfully."

London, September 15.—The War Office states that touch has been gained by aeroplane with Genera' Marmontoff, who in the middle of August broke through the Bolshevist lines facing the volunteer army, and has been carrying on extensive raids around Tamboff.

General Marmantoff moved from Tamboff westwards to Kosloff, thirty-six miles distant, and Jeletz one hundred and seven miles distant. He is still operating behind the Bolshevists, and has interrupted their railway communications and supply system to such an extent that on the Northern sector it is reported that the Bolshevists are only allowing their troops twelve rifle bullets and fifty rounds per machine-gun daily.

General Marmantoff has also released to their homes eighty thousand untrained Bolshevist recruits, and raised two more volunteer infantry battalions among the inhabitants, who are everywhere very friendly.

Peace Proposals Accepted

Stockholm, September 15.—According to a message from Reval the Esthonian Government has accepted the Russian Soviet Government's offer to negotiate peace and the first meeting of peace delegates will be held at Petschory near Pskoff.

London, September 15.—The Esthonian representative in London in an interview with a Reuter's representative emphasised the fact that Esthonia would continue resolutely to oppose the establishment of Bolshevists methods.

He said that Esthonia was not seeking closer relations with the Russian Bolshevists, but circumstances prevented her fighting them indefinitely, and in his opinion the other Baltic States, such as Lithuania and Latvia were similarly influenced.

'Three Faces East'

There is something very fascinating in being thoroughly taken in either with a card trick, or a story, and sometimes by a friend, and that is why we like to see Malini take cards from every part of our clothing, or why we are kept spellbound while listening to one of Sherlock Holmes latest adventures. The fact that you are never quite sure what is going to happen maintains the interest.

"Three Faces East" has got Malini, Sherlock Holmes, Sexton Blake and every other illusionist beat to the veriest frazzle. I started to guess early in the prologue. I thought I had got the right clue in the first act; then I found I had missed it, but sure I was on the trail of the spy when Act I Scene 2 opened. But I wasn't—so from then to the very end I gave up guessing and allowed the players to have it all to themselves. I would not give the story away for a Salvation Lassie's doughnuts or the choicest bag of peanuts. You get along and do some guessing and I'll lay a loganberry juice to a lemon that your answer is wrong. The play is all about spies and wars and secret service agents and there is an air raid and guns and shooting. Its great. I liked it.

When it comes to the acting commend me to the very charming deceiver, Miss Vera Doria. She captivated everyone on the dark side of the footlights with her little ways, she gave the actors all the mystery that the play called for, and at the very last when the whole bag of beans were spilled the audience was too thunderstruck to know what to do. Should they cheer? Should they clap? Should they laugh? What the "Masterpiece" should they do? Well that's up to you to determine.

Herbert Farjeon had a great deal to do as the butler-spy-secret-service-agent-detective. He had a good make-up and had everyone on tip-toe from start to finish. He wandered from English-German to German-French and then to King's English with the greatest of ease and sustained the various disguises like the excellent actor he is.

Rodney Hildebrand calls for notice for the fine bit of declamatory work he did in the prologue as Kugler of the German Intelligence Bureau. Tim Frawley was in fine form when he told the German just what he thought of both him and his nation. He said the lines as if he enjoyed them. The audience certainly did Vere Mathews had quite a lot to do as George Bennett of the English Cabinet. He carried off his part in most convincing style although at times he was not too well heard. But this might be due to the awful clatter that was going on somewhere near the theater all through the performance. "Three Faces East" calls for a big cast and besides those already noticed the rest supplied the back ground well.

Tonight the same mystery will be repeated, and it can be recommended to all those who like to be taken in.

Tomorrow: "East is West."

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL ACTS FOR CHINESE RESIDENT

Requests Consular Body To Ask Release Of Man Jailed By City Magistrate

The Municipal Council has requested the Consular Body to make representations to Chinese authorities for the immediate release of Mr. Yu Tshung-ling, under detention since July 31 in the Shun Pan Ting, Chinese City. His arrest by Chinese authorities followed civil and criminal actions brought against him in the International Mixed Court, both of which were dismissed.

Correspondence between Mr. M. L. Heen, attorney for Mr. Yu, and the Municipal Council, published in the Municipal Gazette today, prompted the request to the Consular Body.

Mr. Yu was arrested while visiting in the Chinese City. He protested the jurisdiction of the City magistrate, claimed citizenship in the International Settlement and pointed out that the matters for which he was arrested had been adjudicated in the Mixed Court. The Magistrate passed judgment against Mr. Yu for half the amount claimed and ordered him into detention pending payment of the judgment, according to Mr. Heen's letter to the Council.

British Naval Court's Probe Into Disaster On Yangtsze Near Conclusion

It is expected that a decision will be rendered today by the Naval Court of Inquiry at the British Consulate-General that has been investigating the loss of the steamer Tamsui which grounded and capsized in the Hukuang cut-off channel of the Yangtsze River near Hankow on the morning of August 24.

Captain John Spancer De Wolf of the Tamsui was the principal witness heard yesterday. In reviewing the events of the wreck he said the vessel left Hankow at 6:45 o'clock in the morning with a cargo of 27,000 piculs of bean cake and was then drawing 19 feet of water. After passing the light boat the steamer Woosung was met, the captain testified, and shortly after that the Tamsui grounded. Captain De Wolf said soundings were immediately taken and they found first 20 feet of water and immediately afterwards 18 feet. Efforts to refloat the Tamsui with the aid of the Woosung failed, according to Captain De Wolf's testimony, and the Woosung then left for Hankow to summon lighters and a tug. After the departure of the Woosung, the witness said, the Tamsui listed and righted one time before she went entirely over.

Other witnesses who were heard yesterday were Ambrose John Clark, who was acting as pilot when the Tamsui grounded, Harold R. Rogers, chief officer, and Angus Buchanan, the chief engineer.

Obstacles Beset Peace Conference

length to which he was prepared to go, always provided that he was met half way in a conciliatory spirit, would surpass the most sanguine expectations of the South.

The Commissioner suggested that it was unwise to prejudge Mr. Wang before he had been given opportunity to show his hand. After all the supreme object was peace and the first thing to do to obtain peace was for both sides to meet and attempt to reach an understanding round the conference table.

The Commissioner said that contrary to reports which had been published he was not expecting Mr. Wang to arrive in Shanghai tonight though four associate delegates were arriving by the night train from Nanking. At the same time the Commissioner, acting in concert with General Lu Yung-hsiang, at present in Shanghai, was doing his utmost to persuade Mr. Wang to come to Shanghai at once in order that negotiations might be opened without delay, and so pave the way to that peace which, the Commissioner emphasised, was of vital importance not to China only but to the world at large.

How Modern Germany Developed

Two stout volumes upon "The German Empire" by William Harbutt Dawson (Macmillans) fill a gap which the war has made felt in many homes and all libraries. The importance of the years between 1867 and 1914 transcends all recorded time in the story of the German race for modern readers, yet too many histories of Germany still current practically close with the formation of the empire in 1871. It is the half-century following Sadowa that concerns us now, preluding the great war.

Mr. Dawson is amply credentialled for his weighty task and he shirks no part of it. The failure of the Frankfort experiment, the wars of unification, the coming of the Emperor who said, "One only is master in the empire, and it is I," the personal characteristics of the Chancellors, the terrible tragedy of Polish oppression, the conquest of fiscal protection over the German Liberals and the Balkan tangles immediately preceding the war are treated clearly, forcibly and at length.

Mr. Dawson does not need to carry us far back to the time when Bismarck thought that Britain on the sea and Germany on the land should stand together as a controlling influence in world events; nor yet so far to the time when Gladstone could say of foreign policy: "If Germany is to become a colonising power, all I say is, 'God speed her!'" Dr. Peters was as yet mercifully unknown, the Hereros unsubjugated and undecimated.

Everything about the German system astounds by its exceeding intricacy. The federation of kingdoms and free city republics in an empire all whose local electoral laws differ from those of Prussia, which Bismarck considered the worst in the world; the intricacies of religious laws and social legislation; the intricacies of the state contributions to the general expense of the empire, which drove the country into a protective tariff policy and compelled it year after year to pile up its debt even in peace; the intricacies of the Polish question, and the manner in which oppression that failed of its object alternated with brief respites—all this requires a skilled and confident hand in the telling.

Not all Germans are ready to give Napoleon much credit for founding their empire—though the Crown Prince was said to be an earnest reader of Napoleonic books. Yet Napoleon's confederation of Germanic states as surely preluded the new empire as his smashing through boundaries in Italy aided the later movement for its unification. As the Austrian Empire was created in 1804 and the Holy Roman Empire only went down in defeat in 1806, the handing on of the torch in Vienna was theoretically continuous and unbroken; but the impulse to North German primacy went much further back than the Danish War. Von Bulow, in his own book on modern Germany, gives no more emphatic credit to the stern, strong Prussian martinet way in founding the empire—the spirit that said of the Poles: "In a struggle between nationalities a nation is either hammer or anvil, either conqueror or conquered"—than does Mr. Dawson. For the softer graces, for the arts and the sciences even, the German world looked to the south, which may now again have scope for influence upon German affairs, freed of the military bond.

It is of course too soon to answer all the questions arising out of the actual breaking out of the war. The Sarajevo murders, for instance.

Here the question of responsibility is treated with necessary brevity—yet there will be no more interesting question for the historian of 1950 than to ask whether Servian under-officers, whose complicity may be conceded, or the Viennese war party, which wanted an excuse for a war and hated the Archduke as a possible obstacle to their plans, had more to do with the murder that nominally set Europe ablaze. Vienna may not have planned the deed, but her short-sighted braves not too secretly rejoiced in its accomplishment.

As a guide in tracing the fortunes of a people whom the gods would destroy and first made mad, Mr. Dawson's history may be commended.

Sylvia And Michael

Sylvia And Michael. By Compton Mackenzie. Harper and Brothers.

Mr. Mackenzie takes care to emphasize the fact that "Sylvia and Michael" is not an independent story, but "really Book Three of 'Sylvia Scarlett,'" and that the only reason for its separate publication lies in "the difficultes of production." The reader therefore should not be surprised to find it closely connected to that history of Michael Fane issued in this country in the two volumes entitled "Youth's Encounter" and "Sinister Street" as well as to "Sylvia Scarlett." So closely connected is it with these that it would probably be scarcely intelligible to any one who either had not read or failed to remember the characters and incidents in the other volumes. By way of refreshing the reader's memory, Mr. Mackenzie has Sylvia briefly outline her past life in the form of a confession made to a priest, while during those long meditations and detailed self-analyses of hers which occupy so large a part of the book, she frequently goes back to the past, considering and weighing her own motives and emotions with the most meticulous care. From first to last she holds the center of the stage, both in her own mind and in the novel. For, though the book is called "Sylvia and Michael," Michael Fane does not appear until the concluding third of the volume, when the author needs him for the "happy ending" of Sylvia's episodic history.

The book begins at the point where "Sylvia Scarlett" left off, when Sylvia, after the humiliation brought upon her by Arthur, fled from London to return to her old vagabond life. The opening of the present volume finds her in Paris, whence she travels to Petrograd—then Petersburg—where she has a contract to sing at the Trocadero Cabaret. In Petrograd she is very ill indeed, and recovers from delirium, with "a sense of regeneration," to find herself in a world which is at war. From Petrograd she goes to keep engagements in Kieff and Odessa, and in Kieff encounters a Russian soldier who buys her a gold bag "set with rubies, sapphires, diamonds, and emeralds," because he has 3,000 rubles and does not know what to do with them—an incident which does not impress one with its probability. She is in Odessa when it is shelled, and later goes to Bucharest. On the platform at Jassy she meets Concetta, now called Queenie Walters, the unfortunate, childish girl she had known in Grenada some six years before. "A whim of destiny" had given poor Queenie into the possession of a juggler known on the stage as Zozo, but she has broken with Zozo, and recently with his successor. Sylvia decides to take care of Queenie, and much of the story has to do with her efforts to keep the girl out of the hands of men, the climax of her endeavors coming when Zozo reappears. For Queenie is a childish and trustful person, as devoid of will and character as she is of nationality, one who "seemed to have had no lovers apart from the purchasers of youth, and to be able to look back with pride and pleasure at nothing except the furs and dresses and jewelry with which she had been purchased."

However, practically all the women in the book save Michael's sister Stella are women who have sold themselves or been sold to various men, and that for lesser price than furs and jewelry, and though when she learned of her failure and Queenie's disappearance "Sylvia caught the waiter by the throat and shook him," she soon calmed down and accepted the situation. From Bucharest the tale moves on to Rumania, still a neutral country, and then to Nish, where Sylvia meets Michael, and where she remains with him after it is evacuated by the Serbs. They are both taken prisoner by the Bulgarians, and the book ends with their escape to Greece, and a love scene at Samothrace.

The story has a colorful and bizarre setting, yet it is the least interesting of Mr. Mackenzie's novels. It lacks the delicate subtlety of "Plashers Mead," and it has little of the vividness of the others, while the conclusion seems arbitrarily brought about by the author. It would need treatment far more deft and convincing than Mr. Mackenzie has given it to make credible a proposal of marriage from a man of Michael Fane's type and station to a woman over 30 years old who has not only lived with several men but been actually on the streets, and that, not because of some extraordinary economic pressure but, as she herself said, for the sake of her soul, imperiled by marriage with a man over-strict and over-respectable—a somewhat curious method of salvation. The cabarets, their frequenters, and the people in the various hotels and lodging houses where Sylvia lives are not sufficiently picturesque for romance, nor have they the vivid and compelling reality which makes memorable, for instance, that Cabaret de l'Homme where Queenie Weston sang in company with the pock-marked blonde. Filth presented as Mr. Mackenzie here presents it is only tiresome and mildly disgusting.

Sylvia's meditations and introspections take up a very large portion of the book, and after pages upon pages of them have been read one's patience begins to give out, for unfortunately Sylvia is much less interesting to the reader than she is to herself—less interesting, too, in this volume than in any of the others in which she plays a part. The scheme of the book gives an opportunity for pictures of Russia and the Balkans in wartime, but it is an opportunity of which the author has apparently endeavored to avail himself as little as possible. A brief sketch of the evacuation of Nish, one of Bulgarian methods with prisoners, and two or three of Russia and Rumania are all that are allowed, though Guy Hazlewood enters the story for a time and talks at very great length about the war, occasionally quite cleverly. The book is, of course, well written, and some of the scenes are effective; but, taken as a whole, it will prove something of a disappointment to Compton Mackenzie's admirers.

AN AVIATOR'S LETTERS

A Stop At Suzanne's And Lower Flights. By Greayer Clover. New York: George H. Doran Company.

Like all personal impressions of the war, these letters and prose sketches written by a young American while serving with the French camion convoy and later as a Lieutenant in the American Aviation Service cannot be read simply as a book. Nor can they be considered in the light of a memorial to their author. They are personal footnotes to history written by a man who gave his life to help make it, and cannot be dissociated with the part he played.

Something of the boy's high-spirited zest for life, his deep sympathy with humanity, his spontaneous humor, his naivete, and tenderness is imprisoned in his papers. His literary talent is marked; his observation is acute and his descriptions are unusually graphic. In the sketch which gives the collection its title there are passages not often surpassed for idyllic tenderness even by writers whose powers have fully matured. In "A Night With the Camion Convoy," which was originally published in Collier's Weekly, Mr. Clover gives his readers a thrilling glimpse of his personal experiences in the perilous service in which he spent six months carrying ammunition and supplies to the front.

The writer's subject matter is varied, ranging from the description of a wartime wedding to the relation of how a British Sergeant won the V. C. by throwing his helmet over a live bomb and then standing on it to prevent the explosion from killing his trenchmates. He tells also how the famous "Bastard Section" won the unlovely sobriquet of which its members were so justly proud; how the French captured Fort Malmaison, how he and three friends went A. W. O. L. together to Rheims and how Jean Descamps, whose statues stand in the parks of Bordeaux and whose pictures hang in the Luxemburg Gallery, felt about holding the rank of simple soldat.

Mr. Clover has put much of his vivid personality into his book. But to his friends he leaves the telling of his own fearlessness and generosity. It is not from him but from the tributes to him included in the book that we learn of his having given all his blankets to a needy family of Belgian refugees.

Greayer Clover, whose father edits The Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, met his death on August 30, 1918, when the airplane he was flying crashed to earth behind the lines. He is buried in the cemetery at Issoudun with his brother writer and comrade of the silver wings, Lieutenant James Richard Crowe.

Anglo-Chinese Cook Book

The Anglo-Chinese Cooking Book which has been prepared in two volumes, one in English and one in Chinese, is still on sale at Messrs. Brewer and Co., Ltd., and Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Ltd.

There are now many newcomers to Shanghai who may not know of this Cooking Book. It is prepared with two objects in view, that it might be helpful to the housekeeper who does not speak Chinese and add what it might to the funds for the B. W. W. A. The B. W. W. A. is still asking for money and the books are not all sold.

Those who have bought the book have found it practical and helpful. Many of the present generation of Chinese cooks read their language and are able to follow the recipes which are written in simple Chinese.

The book is sold by Messrs. Brewer and Co., Ltd., and Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Ltd., free of charge for the benefit of the B. W. W. A.

RUSSIA'S FUTURE

Russia, Her Economic Past And Future. By Joseph M. Goldstein. Published by the Russian Information Bureau in the United States.

Turgenev wrote in one of his prose poems, in days of pessimism about Russia's future, that he always turned to the contemplation of the Russian tongue and was cheered and encouraged. It was impossible to conceive, he wrote, that such a great language as the Russian language is should have been given to other than a great people.

One gathers the same feeling of optimism about Russia and her future from perusing "Russia, Her Economic Past and Future," by Joseph M. Goldstein. Professor Goldstein was connected with the University of Moscow as head of the political economy department, and in his book he galvanises the epic breadth of Russia before the eyes of the reader.

He reminds one in the opening paragraph that Russia covers almost one-sixth of the total land area of the globe, and with this salient fact in mind he proceeds to tell what this Russia of 160,000,000 population, exclusive even of Poland and Finland, misses in the way of implements of civilisation, and which the world and, as he hopes, America must and will supply in the near future.

Illimitless in her geographic boundaries, Russia's railway system, according to Dr. Goldstein, is not in excess of Canada's system, and Canada's railroads serve a population of only 8,000,000.

Russia's vast grain field, her untapped coal, iron, copper, lead and zinc mines, her oil wells, forests, are enumerated, and alongside of them are mentioned the vast canals and inland waters holding out undreamed of possibilities for internal and external commerce. The book is published by the Russian Information Bureau in the United States, and the director of the bureau, A. J. Sack, writes an introduction to it in which he states quite frankly that the book is printed for the purpose of keeping up the interest of American men of finance and leaders of industry in Russia so that when the time comes for America to resume business with Russia American business men will know about that country, its needs and possibilities. In this the book is successful. It tells of Russia convincingly. It leaves no doubt that Russia is destined to be a great nation once more—and will be soon.

Tales Of A Small Town

Winesburg, Ohio. By Sherwood Anderson. New York: B. W. Huebsch. G.$1.50.

Conceivably these stories might have been written before the advent of the new psychology, but if so they would not have been understood. The characters are actuated by motives not exterior; their actions give something of the startling effect of a head and shoulders snapping suddenly out of a hidden trapdoor in an empty room. But Mr. Anderson's expositions make these sudden, infinitesimal, half-mad actions as natural to the reader as an excrescence to a physician; both are the result of accumulated secretions. Froud and Jung have taught us how hopes and ideas crammed back into subcellars of consciousness emerge in grotesque masquerade when pressure slackens or becomes too taut; the little tragedies and comedies which take place in Mr. Anderson's town of Winesburg, Ohio, have the support of scientific revelation.

Not that Mr. Anderson's preoccupation has been with science, not even, as in several of the stories, when he deals with characters who live in the borderlands of sanity. His is a purely human curiosity. The passionate school teacher, Kate Swift, in her yearning to have a share in molding the life of a boy she feels to possess genius, says to him:

> I would like to make you understand the import of what you think of attempting. You must not become a mere peddler of words. The thing to learn is to know what people are thinking about, not what they say.

This is Mr. Anderson's creed also, and his realisation of it in this book gives it an extraordinary quality of vividness, sincerity, tenderness. The inclusion of the last quality may seem surprising in view of what is perhaps the unfortunate introduction to this review; that may have suggested that Mr. Anderson uses the scalpel. Well, he does, but not in the interests of sensation. He loves what he touches; there is the poetry and pathos of the opening story in the book, "Hands," as tragic as the stories dealing with Elizabeth Willard, "Death" and "Mother." The latter tells of a mother who lives in the hope of a destiny for her son removed from drabness. Yet she cannot make the boy see it: it is the tragedy of the inarticulate. The woman's futile struggle to speak reminds one somehow of John Barrymore's dumb gestures when he played Falder in "Justice." Then there are the closing words in "The Philosopher," a characteristic passage, again addressed to young George Willard:

> If something happens, perhaps you will be able to write the book that I may never get written. The idea is very simple, so simple that if you are not careful you will forget it. It is this—that every one in the world is Christ and they are all crucified. That's what I want to say. Don't you forget that. Whatever happens, don't you dare let yourself forget.

If this book came out of Russia we should do it lip-service. But even its American origin ought not to dim Mr. Anderson's achievement. It is an easy way of rubber-stamping works of art to compare them to others that have won consideration. Only this prevents us ranking "Winesburg, Ohio," with "Spoon River," or such sketches as Tolstoy's "A Blot of Ink." Besides, Mr. Anderson's voice is his own. He has not been afraid to speak. He has plucked at the heart of the mystery.

WHY MALARIA RECURS.

Once the spores of the Malaria parasite have become established in the blood something more efficacious than quinine—which at best is purely a palliative—is necessary to eliminate them. Unless these spores are completely exterminated they will remain dormant for varying intervals of time, only to break out into renewed activity whenever the vitality is lowered by chills, change of temperature, debility, or other causes. Then the victim experiences another bout of this distressing disease.

But if the blood is rich, red and strong the system is thereby safeguarded against the causes of lowered vitality, and at the same time this good blood, by creating a generous amount of red corpuscles, makes existence impossible for the germs of Malaria. Thus it is that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have gained such popularity in all countries conspicuous for Malaria. The pure, new, disease-expelling blood which these pills create has brought new life, strength and permanent health to sufferers in every part of the World where Malaria is found.

Don't give Malaria another chance to put YOU out of action. Commence now to fill your veins with a new stream of healthy, pure, red blood, the blood that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can give you at every dose. There is no difficulty in obtaining Dr. William's Pink Pills; they are sold by medicine vendors everywhere, and by Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 96 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, 1 bottle $1.50, 6 for $8.00, post free.

'Specials' Have Field Day

The team representing the regulars in the foreign branch of the Shanghai Municipal Police walked off with the main prize at the Specials' annual outing yesterday, scoring 240 points in the challenge revolver shoot against 201 by the nearest competitor—the Specials' team. Sub-inspector Mills of the regulars made the high mark of the day with 36 points out of a possible 42. Special Constable Kahn led his team with 32 points. The Expeditionary Force Emergency unit, the returned officers organisation, ranked third with 191 points, D. G. Latima of this team scoring 32. The Sihks came fourth with 186 points. Naik 73, scored 34, the second high individual in the competition.

In the Specials squad shoot, Sinza "D" squad came first with a score of 59.33 percent. The tug-o'-war was won by a crew of heavyweight Specials over Sihks. The equipment race, which was a speed contest coupled with dexterity in unbuckling accoutrements and putting them on again, was taken by Constable Landers.

The catch-thief novelty developed into a long distance Marthon and was captured by Constable Taylor.

The awards were made by Mrs. R G. MacDonald, wife of Second Assistant Commissioner of Police MacDonald, who passed out the various cups and other silver trophies amid cheers from the spectators. For the Squad shoot the prizes were small silver cups, given by Mr. MacDonald. The tug-o'-war was rewarded by eight more given by Mr. F. H. Crossley. Relieves Salt Shortage, Returns With Salmon After Unique Voyage

Chinese Steamer Gives Aid To Siberian Fish Industry When Japanese Disappoint

Because of her recent record, the small Chinese steamer, Ka-ho, now in Shanghai, is in a fair way to be classed with those famous little vessels which ran the Japanese blockade to supply food to Port Arthur, some fifteen years ago. The Ka-ho is not exactly a blockade-buster, but she recently carried a cargo of salt to the salt-famined fishing district of Nikolaievsk, Siberia. And now she is back in Shanghai with a cargo of Nikolaievsk salmon salted by Russian co-operatives, fish which the Chinese will buy readily enough because it is not Japanese.

The salt shortage at Nikolaievsk is not easy to acount for, but it came about through two circumstances, the clogging of Siberian rail transportation which might reasonably have been expected to bring sufficient salt from western Siberia, and the cancellation of deliveries on orders placed in Japan. Nikolaievsk is situated far north at the mouth of the great Amur river. By this time of year the harbor is ice-locked. The Amur, like the Columbia river in America, yearly experiences a great rush of salmon up its course in the spawning season. The fish must be caught at that time or not at all. The season of 1918 was unexpectedly heavy and the supply of salt ran out. Those fishermen who were members of the co-operative societies were protected by the fact that there was a hold-over supply from previous years, but private fishermen and packers who did not belong to such societies in some cases faced total loss. The fish that many Russians needed that Winter spoiled and the fishermen had nothing to show for their toil.

Orders were placed early this year with firms in Japan for salt. In June the Zakoopsbit, which is one of the two great unions of co-operators in Siberia, learned from its Kobe office that deliveries could not be made. Then it was that the private venture of the Ka-ho started out. The salt, which cannot be sold from China proper, was bought from a British firm in Weihaiwei. The firm of Lury Bros. and Co. of Shanghai handled this part of the transaction as purchasers. The Zakoopsbit carried out the final chapter which had to do with bringing back the smoked and salted product to sell to Chinese who will not buy Japanese caught fish.

The catch this year has not been large. If it had there would have been a shortage too great for the Ka-ho to have relieved. And it is supposed by the Russian co-operative members here that Japan probably has much of the supply that she was saving for her own fishermen.

Rider Haggard Urges Kaiser's Trial Be Dropped

Sir H. Rider Haggard.

Sir H. Rider Haggard, the noted British novelist, has joined those Britishers who would leave the ex-Kaiser's punishment to his own conscience. In a recent statement in London he said: "Not only will mud be stirred up by the proposed trial, but the resulting mixture will be used to blacken Great Britain's face before the world. Teutonic hatred against us will be accentuated for generations. I think that, if they were asked, many of sound judgment would say let the submarine and other murderers, violators and all instruments of frightfulness be dealt with under martial law on sea, or where they carried out their crimes, but let this royal intimate of Heaven fall into the hands of Heaven, not into those of man."

Affairs In Armenia Put Under Control Of American Officer

Colonel William Haskell To Take Entire Charge Of Economic Questions

(American Press Wireless)

Paris, September 8.—Colonel William Haskell of the American Expeditionary Forces has been appointed high commissioner for the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy—the four Great Powers—in Armenia.

He will have entire charge of all economic questions in the country, with most extended powers, reporting to the Council at Paris. All relief organisations in Constantinople, Georgia, and the provinces throughout Turkey will report to him.

While Colonel Haskell's main duty will ostensibly deal with relief measures, he virtually will rule Armenia until the mandate question is settled.

"The Turks are busy trying to preserve the Turkish Empire," the American press declares, "and recent acts are in defiance of the armistice. This Turkish menace will make difficult the problem Colonel Haskell has been designated to solve. The Allies call him the American Cromer, and expect him to straighten out the tangles in Armenia as Viscount Cromer did in India and Egypt. He is gathering a large staff and will leave soon for his new post."

Colonel Haskell commanded the 69th New York of the National Guard at the Mexican border in 1916 and after the declaration of war in 1917, was for a time commandant of Camp Upton, N.Y. He went to Europe with the American Expeditionary Forces where he served as chief of operations of the 2nd Army Corps. On April 1 of this year, he was sent to Bucharest, Rumania, by Food Director Hoover as Director for Rumania. Up to the middle of May, he had put 200,000 metric tons of food at an average cost of $250, U.S. currency per ton, a total of $50,000,000 worth, into Rumania. He had control of all railroads, steamers, both river and ocean, and took control of all customs. He was also in charge of all British food imports.

Your Health Comes First

Good Health is your most valuable asset;—its preservation should, therefore, receive your most careful consideration. An important point which should always be borne in mind is the fact that a great many forms of ill-health can be traced, directly or indirectly, to disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is wise, therefore, to keep these organs in healthy activity. When they show any signs of derangement let that reliable medicine, Beecham's Pills, be taken at once. Always deal with digestive ailments in time. They are far-reaching in their possibilities of mischief if neglected, as they too often are. Ownership Of Railways May Become Central Issue In Presidential Election

Wilson Is Said To Favor Leaving Question Of Public Or Private Control To Decision Of Nation's Voters Next Year

Washington, August 5.—According to close friends of the Administration today President Wilson believes the issue in the 1920 election will be the nationalisation of railroads. He is said to believe the issue has finally arisen in the present demand of the railroad employes for the "democratisation" of their industry, on which the new party alignments, as between conservatives and radicals, will be based.

It is with this belief, it is declared, that President Wilson proposes to submit the whole question of adjusting the present difficulty to Congress, rather than have the Director General of Railroads settle it. It pointed out that the Director General has the authority—granted by Congress to the President, and not yet withdrawn—to change railroad rates. He could have granted the increases asked by the men if he considered them justified, and advanced the rates sufficiently to meet the increases, had the President been willing to take the responsibility. Or he could have refused the increases if he did not think them necessary, and fought the battle out with the unions.

The Big Political Issue

The submission of the whole subject to Congress, however, it is declared, is in line with the President's belief that the question of the democratisation of labor is now the big political issue and should be dealt with by the political representatives of the people. The line-up which will come when the bill embodying the President's ideas reaches a vote will be the line-up for the next campaign. And the President confidently believes, these men declare, that this will cause a division on both sides of the present party aisles.

It developed during the day that Senators and the officials of the railway employes were united on one point. Both were opposed to referring the wage demands of the railway operatives to Congress. In this connection Senator Cummins declared the President had ample power to meet the omergency without calling upon Congress for a further grant of powers.

However, the leaders of the employes, without arguing as to where the authority lay, reiterated their demand that Director General Hines grant their desired wage increases promptly. They wanted no delay such as would follow the submission of the matter to Congress.

These leaders drafted a definite plan which they thought might meet the immediate situation, but pending the submission of their proposition to Director Hines they refused to make it public.

Strike Continues To Spread

Meanwhile the strike of railway men continued to spread, despite the appeals of their representatives that the men now at work should hold on and that those who had already struck should return to their employment until a strike vote could be taken. It was estimated that 300,000 men were already out, and predictions were made that the threatened tie-up would be a fact much earlier than the thirty days' limit set by Acting President Jewell, of the Railway Department of the American Federation of Labor, when he said that if the demands of the men were not granted the railroads of the country would be "tied up so tight that they would never run again."

President J. J. Forrester of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, and Express Company Employes, did not succeed in seeing Director General Hines today but will meet him tomorrow. Mr. Forrester said today nothing would satisfy his followers except an immediate advance in wages. Further, he intimated that the men were getting out of hand saying:

"There must be some kind of immediate relief in the way of adjustment of pay if peace is to be maintained on the railways. The situation is becoming very acute, and it requires all my diplomacy and patience to handle the situation."

Railroad Executives Gather

Aroused by the demand of the railway employes that private capital must get out of the railroads, executives of the big roads began to gather in Washington to fight against the Plumb plan for taking over the railways. These officials admitted that they were in the capital to battle against their obliteration from the transportation business.

The tense situation inspired a spirited debate in the Senate, during which Senator Thomas, Democrat, of Colorado, likened the attitude of the railway men to treason, and called upon Congress to make firm answer to their demands.

A formal statement is expected tomorrow from the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, replying to letters to Chairman Cummins from President Wilson and Mr. Hines, requesting legislation to establish a wage board. The statement, it is understood, will advise the President that in the committee's opinion such legislation is unnecessary, and that the committee believes he and the Director General have all power necessary to fix wages and also rates during government operation of railroads.

Another special meeting of the committee was called for tomorrow afternoon to consider the President's request and to receive a report from the sub-committee.

His willingness to have this made the issue, and his decision to stand on the radical side, is no surprise to Democratic Senators who have long disapproved the President's appeals to the radical wings of both old parties, as well as to the Socialist party itself. Republicans of both radical and conservative wings assert that the President, despite the confidence of his supporters on the floor of the Senate has been disturbed as to the popularity of the League of Nations, and as to the popularity of the Democratic party, by several recent straws. Notably they point to the election in the Eighth District—of Kentucky, where King Swope, running on a straight Republican platform, plus an anti-League of Nations plank, was elected by 2,100 votes over Judge Hardin, chairman of the Kentucky Democratic committee, in a district which has been Democratic without a single slip for a generation. This was a bye-election following the death of Representative Helm.

FORTY-TWO CHILDREN BUT NONE TO HELP HIM

Philippine Constabulary Find Man Claiming To Be 125 Years Old.

A Constabulary report from the provincial commander of Bohol, the headquarters of the Philippine Constabulary at Manila, say: "On July 26, at Clarin one Eugenio Panillon made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide by stabbing himself in the abdomen but was too weak. This man when seen claimed to be one hundred and twenty-five years old (and looked it), to have been married four times, had forty-two children all of whom have been married four times, had forty-two children all of whom left him and being absolutely destitute was tired of life and wanted to die. He can hardly stand with the assistance of poles, has been living in a hovel on the ground about three feet high not fit for a dog and depending upon the doubtful generosity of the neighbors for sustenance. The Municipal authorities claim they have no funds to take care of such cases. However, a little better place for him to live in was constructed by the police and prisoners and promises obtained to watch and feed him. It seems as though the municipality, funds or no funds, should be obliged to care for such a pitiable case as this."

Children Cry for Fletcher's
CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is particularly a preparation for Infants and Children made agreeable to the taste, acceptable to the stomach and pleasant in its action. It has been in use for over thirty years and has always been one of the most highly esteemed of all cathartic preparations. It has one great advantage over other preparations of its kind in that while it opens the organs readily and completely, it does not have a tendency to produce subsequent constipation so much to be dreaded.

It was only after years of research in the fields of herbs and roots for a combination of purely vegetable matter that would have all the virtues of Castor Oil, without its disagreeable, nauseating properties, especially when used for infants or children, that the formula used in Fletcher's Castoria was found, and which for over 30 years has proven its worth. Try it.

Save the Babies.

Infantry mortality is something frightful. We can hardly realise that of all the children born in civilised countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one quarter die before they reach one year, thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one half before they are fifteen! We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestion, sickness, death. To avoid any possibility of giving your child opiates, or narcotics of any kind, keep Fletcher's Castoria in the house, and Save the Babies.

The Children's Comfort—The Mother's Friend.

Banking Service with AMERICA —direct and personal

EXPORTERS or importers now engaged in, or thinking of, trade with America would do well to consider not only the special nature of our facilities, but also the personal interest we take in every one of our customers' transactions.

First of all, we offer direct banking service—without intermediary dealings, or unnecessary delays.

Equally important is our personal service. Every transaction is followed through, both here and in America, by our own representatives with a personal interest, the value of which is evident in the service rendered.

May we talk with you about America?

Exchange Market

Messrs. Maitland, Fearon and Brand write as follows in their exchange circular for week ending Wednesday, September 17:

Exchange: Silver in London at 61⅛d. for ready delivery and 59½d. forward shows an advance of ⅛d. and ¾d. respectively, since this day last week.

Minor fluctuations have not affected the local exchange rates, T.T. on London having remained unchanged throughout at 6s. 0d.

The New York-London rate has in the same period recovered from 4.14¼d. to 4.18d., causing our rate on America to advance in sympathy from 125 to 126, a telegram received from New York today gives the average cross rate for the week ended 13th inst. as 4.17¼d.

There has been a sharp decline in the Paris-London exchanges, the cross rate today standing at 37.70, as against 34.60 a week ago, a certain amount of nervousness as to the future has been evinced, with the result that franc bills have not been easy to place except on most unfavorable terms. 12.10 to 12.20 October delivery being the most recent rates at which business has been done.

The local money market is undoubtedly easier, which fact is clearly reflected in the better feeling existing in the piece goods markets, prices at auctions showing a marked advance on last week, this improvement however has not affected exchange rates, and a premium of 3d. for cash is still obtainable without much difficulty; 4m's paper cannot be placed at anything under 1d. premium for this month, some banks even going so far to demand ½d. over the rates for October delivery.

The market closes quiet but steady. The local stock of sycee and bar silver at Tls. 16,820,000 is about 7 lakhs lower than last week. The stock of Mexican and Chinese Dollars at $14,650,000 is $400,000 down.

IMPARTIAL AND PROGRESSIVE

slender thread [illegible] hangs that even consideration must be given to the small theatrics of a small soul puffed with vainglorioussness and famished with the hunger for the limelight.

A novelist at best only second rate, whose note rests equally on his achievements in literature and his feats as a flutterer of Italian dovecotes, whose gasconadings over Fiume in the last few months have been taken less and less seriously even by Italian jingoes—D'Annunzio leads a rump army into Fiume and holds the port. It is farce, not an issue. It is not even worthy of extreme punishment for those guilty of it. The extreme penalty for the offense of sedition in army service would even be a mistake: it would be construed as a halo of martyrdom by the unthinking. The punishment that would hurt most and meet the demands of judgment best would be the universal branding of D'Annunzio and his fellow-swashbucklers by the Italian people with the mark of ridiculousness. Certainly no blame attaches to the Italian people or the Italian government.

The Silver Lining

(The British income tax allowance for a wife is to be raised from £25 to £50.)

Phyllis, your pricelessness can never pall;
Your value (sometimes questioned by the querist)
Is very clear to me—I always call
You "dearest!"

Lately, however, Austen, all a-thrill,
Concerning your assessment has been troubled;
Then he announced: "The wife's allowance will Be doubled."

So, though some flagrant failures dull his fame,
Posterity will find one sparkling facet:
The ordinance whereby a wife became
An asset!

'Americanising' England Through The Movies

By Sir Sidney Lorr
(In Fortnightly Review, London)

The Americanisation of this country goes on at a great pace. American stories and magazines are stacked on every bookstall. About half the new plays which are presented on the London stage come from across the Atlantic; so do many of the revues, and variety entertainments, and music-hall shows. The English theatrical manager is now as much interested in New York and Chicago as he was erstwhile in Paris. We get our dances from America, with the weird music to which they are enacted. Our mother and grandmothers floated through the valse to the dreamy sensuousness of Strauss and Gungl and other Viennese composers. Today young couples—and middle-aged couples—jerk and jazz, while minstrels imitate or exaggerate the noises which arose from the banging of tin kettles and rattling of saucepan lids at negro camp-meetings in the South [illegible] States. Thus does the c[illegible] Empire pursue its Westward [illegible]

The greatest American "spiritual" conquest of all is that of the cinema. In the world of the film America has [illegible] constantly seeing life through American spectacles. [illegible] phases of American society [illegible] better known to our small tradesmen, mechanics, laborers, with their wives, sons, and daughters than our own. What goes on, from the scenario-writer's point of view, within the luxurious mansions and country-houses of American financiers has been revealed to every English shop-assistant and factory-hand. They know all about the mammoth hotels, and the sumptuous restaurants, and the dance-halls, and night-clubs, and the seaside or hillside pleasure resorts. They know the ways of the millionaire, upright or shady—generally shady—and the ways of the adventurer, who aspires after his dollars or his daughter, and the ways of the Wild West, where stalwart young men with revolvers defend virtuous school mistresses. They know all about those other young men, the fast young men who engage in the pleasures of the town, and tempt "business girls" to stray into the paths of error. They gaze at American houses, American furniture, American scenery; they confront American police captains, and American trainmen, and American criminals. The moral presented to them is that of the writer of the American story. For them the difficult epigrams in which the composer of the American scenario is accustomed to express his thoughts have no mysteries. They can construe the sub-titles off-hand, translate even the obscurest of them at sight.

No wonder our younger generation talks American. No wonder astute advertisers, anxious to catch the prevailing note allure us with direct personal exhortations in the manner of the American publicity expert, who is an acknowledged master of his craft. Mr. Jones no longer informs the nobility and gentry that he has a stock of goods which he is prepared to sell at a moderate price. He prefers a more direct and demonstrative form. "You are a business man; your time means money. You cannot afford to cut it to waste by fooling around after low-grade stuff. It is up to you to get the best. You get it, and get it quick, from A. P. Jones. Why? Because A. P. Jones specialises in mind-saving. A. P. Jones has studied this thing out. He knows that you need your brains for live work, not for worrying over back numbers. Therefore——" and so forth for a vivid column or two. The language, the mode of thought, would have been unintelligible to most Britons a few years ago. But O. Henry, and the American magazines, and "Uncle Sam" plays, and the cinema, but most of all the cinema, have made it familiar in our mouths as household words. No missionary ever had such a preaching stool in foreign lands as this pictorial pulpit, which is set up several times a day—everywhere.

One might speculate widely as to what the results of this feast of film-kultur are likely to be. From one point of view you might say there is something obviously beneficial in it. We are all asking that the two English-speaking peoples shall be brought into closer communion, that they shall get to know more of one another. Well, is not the cinema reaching towards this high purpose: is it not, at least, making the Americans better known to the British, and giving us a deeper understanding of our kinsmen across the Ocean? Is it? I am not so sure. For the view we [illegible] of the United States on the [illegible] and indeed through the other [illegible] of popular information, is [illegible] incomplete, and distorted. In the popular screen pictures, as in the popular "best-selling" novels, and in the only kind of American [illegible] publications which circulate in Great Britain, we have certain phases of American life over-emphasised, and others ignored. After all, a great nation does not consist mainly of "crooks" and criminals and dishonest financiers, and impossibly sentimental girls, and fatuous "society women," and funny men playing the fool brilliantly. If you were to judge the United States from the majority of the picture-shows, or from the magazines on sale in England, you would form an erroneous impression. There are other aspects of that varied and vivid civilisation. But we do not see much of those other aspects; we do not understand, for example, how intensely sober America is under this surface frivolity so insistently presented to us, how much there is of genuine thought, earnest effort, and real culture in the better sense, and how many people there are in the universities, the large cities, the farmsteads, everywhere from the Great Lakes to the Caribbean, who are not exclusively absorbed in money-making and pleasure-seeking. Of them we hear and see too little.

The Moral Equivalency Of Baseball

Of all the folk who would eat their cake and have it too the [illegible] who would abolish war [illegible] yet preserve its benefits seem the most outrageously illogical and [illegible] absurd. When William James wrote his famous essay upon a Moral Equivalent of War he conceded the doubts and difficulties frankly, and merely stated the desired end without pretending to know it. He suggested certain adventurous occupations, such as railroading, as coming nearest to the education yielded by war. Oddly enough, he proposed something very like conscription to do the adventurous labor of the world, that every citizen might benefit by it.

Now comes a writer in The Dial who puts forward baseball as the answer to the whole problem. We can believe that Professor James was amused by the suggestion when it was broached to him, those years ago, and there are traces of humor in the current Dial article—as considerable traces as so solemn a remolder of the universe can countenance. But in the end the searcher for a moral equivalent of war presents baseball in a quite religious fervor.

". . . . I am ready to urge the claims of international baseball as capable of arousing far more national religious fervor than the more monotonous game of armaments and war. Those who fear 'the deadly monotony of a universal reign of peace' can convince themselves of the thrilling and exciting character of baseball by watching the behavior of crowds not only at the games, but also at the baseball score boards miles away. National rivalries and aspirations could find their intensest expression in a close international pennant race, and yet such rivalry would not be incompatible with the establishment of the true Church Universal, in which all men would feel their brotherhood in the Infinite Game."

Thrills and excitement—all that this advocate of peace can see in war—are incidental to war training, to be sure, part of the rough, hard stuff of life upon which William James felt human youngsters should toughen their teeth. But the vicarious thrills of the bleachers are about as far away from the terrible effort and risk of a battle as The Dial is from life. In the last analysis it is sacrifice that makes war a great moral training school to stiffen wills and ennoble and enrich. And there can be no sacrifice without risk, without tragedy, without fierce effort. There is the dilemma which our pacifists face: They would retain the benefit of war, yet they must begin by rejecting the very stuff of devotion which alone gives it moral value. They are even worse than the child who would eat its cake and keep it. They wish a cake that is all pretty pink-and-white icing, and yet they must have it nutritious and wholesome.—New York Tribune.

The German Harvest

By William C. Dreher
(New York Tribune)

Berlin, July 10.—The unhappiest people in Germany are naturally the Conservatives—the elements that we group together under the designations of Pan-Germans, Prussian aristocracy, Prussian militarism. They have lost more through the war than any other class of the people in some important respects. They lost their cherished ambitions of a Germany in a dominant position in Europe, enlarged by extensive annexations and enriched by huge war indemnities; they have lost their political position, their Kaiser and with him the military machine and the control it gave them over Germany. The great bureaucratic machinery of Prussia is gradually passing out of their hands. Socialist labor leaders are stepping into the shoes of the district presidents; the Socialist waves have begun to play upon the economic structure.

And thus it comes about that the lamentations called forth by the signing of the peace treaty were more poignant in the Conservative press than elsewhere. A few of the utterances of Conservative papers may find a place here.

The Pommersche Tagespost, of Stettin, ranted thus: "Burning, boiling hatred must be kindled in all German hearts. Revenge, unsparing revenge, will we take upon our oppressors. Retribution and revenge, instead of father and mother, are the first words that we want to hear babbled by our latest born children." Yet this wild editor feels sure that not even his strong words, "but only action," will avail to save Germany, and the specific action demanded is "that we again become a power, that we again forge a German sword as strong and unconquerable as the old one." He even thinks immediate "action" is possible: "In the East the torch of liberty must be lighted and its blaze will penetrate victoriously into the West. . . . Forward to the rescue!"

In comparison with the Stettin paper, the Deutsche Tageszeitung, the Pan-German organ of Count von Reventlow, is mild. "Germany is dead," it wrote; "in place of Mitteleuropa, which fructified the world and preserved its peace for more than forty years, there appears a wild chaos, in which Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Wilson . . . have sowed the dragon's teeth of eternal enmity and most venomous hatred."

Of course, President Wilson comes in for much sharp criticism in connection with the signing of the treaty. It is not necessary to reproduce remarks of that kind here; but the Hamburger Nachrichten, which used to be Bismarck's body organ in the final years of his life, fastened upon one of the President's sins at Versailles which has probably not been duly characterised by any other newspaper in the world. Here is its astonishing discovery: "It is characteristic of the moral decline of our opponents and their leading statesmen that Wilson demanded that his wife should be present at the signing. For such a gross lack of tact we can find no parliamentary expression whatever; but the variety show character of today's peace ceremony is adequately characterised by it. The humiliation inflicted upon us here again by our enemies the German people will never forget. It is the summit of human brutality to make a theatrical performance out of an act of state that is to decide the weal and woe of an entire people."

In spite of their deep disappointment with the peace terms most Germans turn hopefully to the League of Nations. That arrangement is now their only opening through which a moderation of the harsher stipulations of the treaty can be expected. While there is much genuine sentiment in favor of the League in itself, I suspect that this hope of getting a certain absolution—at least some relaxation of punishment—through the League, is the chief ground for its rather marked popularity among Germans. Popularity, however, is too strong a word; it is an acceptance rather than a whole-hearted approval of the League. The real friends of the League here—and that means the present government and all the democratic elements—wanted a much further-reaching form of the compact than that adopted at Paris.

Economic and social conditions have been passing from bad to worse and the elements of social unrest have chosen just this time, apparently, for a concerted effort to increase the troubles of a government already weak. Strikes and riotous outbreaks, accompanied by the pillaging of food shops, have occurred in many towns within a week. Here at Berlin and in a few other cities a strike of railway workers was begun, which threatened at one time to extend to the whole country.

The folly of such a strike, from the standpoint of Prussia's finances, was manifest. Even after railway rates have been sharply advanced the roads are being operated at a heavy loss. The Finance Minister said last week that the deficit to be met this year, if the demands of the railway workers were yielded to, would reach 3,600 or probably 4,000 million marks. He added that he had already asked the Assembly for credits of 10,000 millions, but soon would have to ask for an additional 4,000 millions. The wages of the men had already been so advanced that the average for the whole country was 4,200 marks per man; but the new advances asked for would have raised this figure to 8,000 marks.

In the negotiations with the workers the government showed the impossibility of raising their pay, but offered a compromise in the shape of an extensive reduction of the prices at which foreign food is sold, thinking, evidently, that this would nip in the bud a host of other strikes. The reductions will cause a clear loss of 1,500,000,000 marks to the nation, states and towns within the next three months. The railway organisations accepted this offer and voted their disapproval of the strikes. Nevertheless, the strikers refused for several days to return to work, preferring to lend an ear to revolutionary agitators, who told them that "whoever has control of the railways has his hand on the throat of the state." However, they finally went to work, after having been threatened with summary dismissal, but they went sulkily, murmuring that their demands had not been withdrawn, but only postponed. So the nationwide railway strike has been adjourned for a time; but the feeling that some evil force has its hands on the throat of the state remains.

Under the brief sway of Socialism not yet realised German labor has become exceedingly dictatorial. The laboring people, of course, are living under extraordinarily hard conditions, with food of all sorts extremely scarce and dear; but it is none the less evident that they are in a mood that bodes ill for the German nation. Like the tamed lion that has once tasted human blood, they are breaking away from all control. The old labor organisations, once models of wise moderation in modern labor movements, have for a half year seen the reins slipping from their hands and, passing into the hands of reckless, turbulent leaders. The laboring classes have proved on more than one occasion that they can force the government to do their will, or at least make big concessions; and it is to be expected that they will continue to exert pressure upon it through strikes.

And the economic effects have already begun to manifest themselves in forms that augur ill for Germany's further development. At a recent meeting of the stockholders of a great coal company in the Essen region Hugo Stinnes, one of the coal and steel magnates of Germany, said that the aggregate deficits of the coal companies in western Germany since the revolution amount to 500,000,000 marks, which happens to be just about the amount paid in dividends during the whole war. Another report on conditions there in the coal and iron industry says that production has sunk to about one-fourth of what it was before the war, whereas not half of the home demand can be satisfied, not to mention foreign business. Many shops that build cars and locomotives and other machinery have been forced to shut down because they cannot obtain coal and iron; and meanwhile "control has passed into the hands of laborers and office employes who, instead of working, are ever holding long-winded discussions of socialisation and similar problems."

At Munich the excessive demands of the workmen, together with the prostration of business, have caused several important establishments to shut down. The most prominent manufacturer there, a builder of locomotives, adopted a drastic process with his men when they demanded the same pay for a six-hour work day as they had been getting for nine. He asked the shop leaders to go before a notary with him and he would sign a deed giving them the whole establishment outright. I know a manufacturer who did the same thing, with the happy result that he was at least able to shut down without further loss. His men, of course, declined the gift.

Homes Without Servants

The American Way

By F. A. McKenzie
(London Daily Mail)

England moans over its domestic servant problem. But England's condition at its worst would seem like Paradise here.

In England, the mistress accustomed in old times to three maids now often has to manage with one, and may be has to pay the one as much as she formerly paid three. In Canada and the United States most people cannot discover the one maid, although they are prepared to pay far above British wages.

The girls who can be had are usually raw, inexperienced Swedish and Finnish immigrants, barely able to make themselves understood. These demand and secure wages beyond British imagination.

I recently visited one of the most famous lawyers on the Atlantic coast. His drawing-room was big enough for a Mayfair millionaire. His expensive and well-selected library of ten thousand volumes proclaimed at once his taste in literature and the depth of his purse.

It was Sunday afternoon, and he had invited several friends to meet me. The wife and daughter, with the help of the young men, did everything, from opening the front door to the guests to bringing hot water from the kitchen and, presumably, "washing up" afterwards.

The upkeep of their house must have meant almost ceaseless work for them. They told me that the only help they could obtain was an old woman who looked in for a few hours a day but who would not come on Sundays. It was not a question of price with them. They had plenty of money and were willing to spend it. The labor was not to be had.

"We pay our maid forty-five dollars a month," (£108 a year), a Calgary housewife told me. "She has every evening and all Sunday off. We are lucky to have found her."

All domestics are not paid so much in Canada. In some districts they receive only twenty-five dollars a month (£60 a year). Across the border the rates are higher. A friend of mine with a small flat pays his maid £120 a year. She sleeps out comes early in the morning, and of course, has Sunday off. This is not exceptional. I hear of Japanese boys in New York, working in pairs who obtain £360 a year between them.

Most people cannot afford to pay such prices, even in New York. The result is a steady evolution in the development of homes that are either wholly servantless or have a maid coming in for an hour or two a day. The old guild of charwomen has been glorified into a Home Helpers' League. Here trained servants can be hired. They come to you for a fixed time each day, and you are charged accordingly. Their work is supervised, you pay smartly for it, but you can depend on it being done, just as you can depend on the great store delivering your cooked joint in time. These leagues are springing up in several great cities.

Life for the childless married couple is made as easy as possible. There are innumerable flats consisting of good-sized bedroom and sitting-room, a kitchenette, and the usual offices. You can obtain these for as little as $70 a month (£170 a year) down town, or less in the suburbs.

The kitchenette looks at first glance like a doll's room. It is the size of a medium larder, with shelves and cupboards around, and with a little electric (sometimes gas) stove on one side. Here you can do any kind of chafing-dish cookery, can make coffee, stew, or cook light meals.

The walls are of enamel and can be easily wiped down. There is a tiny sink in the corner, with unlimited hot water from the central supply. Cooking becomes a game rather than a serious undertaking.

There is no problem of cleaning fireplaces, or bringing up the coal, because there is central heating from the basement. In summer the iceman leaves the ice each morning at your door, and the milkman deposits his bottle of milk. All laundry is sent out. An hour's service by an emissary of the Home Helpers' League each day does all the cleaning up necessary.

So long as there are only two in the home this works very well. What when the children come? Then some people try to bring up the children in flats, much to the harm of the children and the general annoyance of others. Wiser folk go beyond the city. There are many suburban homes as inconvenient as the worst in England. There are others where the work of the house has been reduced to a minimum by intelligent arrangement.

The Fly As A Menace To Health

By Garrett P. Serviss

There was a good object lesson about the fly danger during a recent warm spell, when the sudden occurrence of extraordinary heat brought, instantly, an invasion of flies, which astonished everybody who saw it. Where I live, in the suburbs, every house was taken possession of by hundreds of flies, which seemed to come by magic.

There had been very few flies before, and now, suddenly, they were among us and upon us as if the sunbeams had bred them in an instant out of nothing. Of course it was the enforced throwing open of doors and windows that gave them access to the houses, but their presence even out of doors, in any considerable numbers, had not previously been noticed.

Their numbers and their insolence swiftly increased during two warm days—but a return chill drove them into their refuges to await another longer warm spell, when they will take the field for good. Their hordes are simply lying in wait. Many are still in their comfortable popai cases, or sleeping-bags. The moment warm weather arouses them they will swarm forth. From the puparium the full-grown flies emerge. They are adults from birth.

All they have to do is to crawl about in the sun and air until their wings are dried; then they are ready and fit. In a very few days, perhaps only a day or two, the newborn fly is beginning to lay eggs. It does not require days, but only hours, to get at its work of gathering and distributing the germs of disease.

There are people—fortunately very few—who refuse to believe that flies distribute disease. They look upon flies as "scavengers," and consequently as useful in keeping human habitations clean. How intelligent persons can take that view, in face of the habits of flies known to everybody, it is difficult, indeed, to comprehend. However, if the defenders of the innocence and purity of flies could attend a few fly autopsies they would probably correct their erroneous notions very promptly.

The foul lives of flies, luckily for us, lead them to their own destruction by milliards. Flies would own the earth if they lived clean lives. But, owing to their constant habit of luxuriating in infection they fill themselves with parasitic and fungus diseases, and are swept off in recurrent epidemics.

It is well for the sake of the public health that these facts should be stated. You can have no fouler or more dangerous visitor in your house than a fly. The notion that flies are useful in clearing away impurities was long ago flatly contradicted by the experience of some European towns from which they were almost completely banished. These towns became remarkable for their cleanliness and healthfulness. A fly, like a man, is known by the company he keeps. The fly seeks dirt because it suits his nature; he has no use for things or places that are clean.

The influx of flies with warm weather gives a valuable hint with regard to the best ways to get rid of them. Do not stop killing those that you find in your house, but go after them in barns, garages and outhouses. Fly-papers, which are not very suitable for use in dwelling rooms, are excellent for barns, stables, and in certain places on porches, where they act as guards against the invaders who would otherwise enter the house. Catch them before they get inside.

If you have screens, do not let that stop you from killing the flies outside the screens. Don't simply sit behind your defenses and let the enemy rage without, for he will surely find some way to get in; he will make himself familiar with the kitchen if he can't enter the parlor, and the kitchen is the point of greatest peril.

More effective than killing full-grown flies is killing the eggs, the maggots, and the sleeping pupae. In the hot season the insects run through these three stages with incredible speed. From the laying of the eggs to the hatching out of the larvae or maggots twenty-four hours on the average and only eight hours in very favorable circumstances.

From the hatching of the maggots to their transformation into pupae (little brown cases with the undeveloped flies inside), four or five days. From the formation of the pupae to the birth of the full-fledged fly from three to five days in the Summer time. But in Winter the pupae may lie dormant for five or six months, waiting for the Spring sunshine.

Now, when you know that a single female fly can lay more than a hundred eggs at a batch, and that in a long Summer there may be a dozen successive generations, the number of whose individuals increases in geometric proportion, you see the dimensions of the work before you when you start out to fight flies. Nevertheless, it has been demonstrated that a community can be practically rid of flies, if all its members will enlist and do battle for the common good. Manure refuse, decaying vegetables, fermenting substances of all kinds, are the breeding grounds of flies.

As the "Rose of Alexandria," whose dancing appealed at once to the highest and the lowest passions, and brought the richest men in Egypt down on their knees—the daughter of Satan in whose toils the youth of the city of luxury and immorality languished—the woman who laughed in the face of all things and sent souls of men to hell and yet won Salvation!

As the "Wickedest woman in the World," whose life was a thing misspent and whose body was a thing impure—whose beauty, guiles and wiles dragged into the depths of depravity the flower of the manhood of Egypt—a must difficult impersonation to which MARY GARDEN alone could do justice as the thrilling, electric, vital personality of flesh and blood—the Daring, Sensational, Unusual Woman who constantly challengers the attention of the World.
